Figure 1 is a 10x10 grid of small plots, each representing a different combination of 10 factors (A-J) and their effect on the growth of 1000 wheat plants. The factors are: A (soil type), B (seed type), C (plant density), D (fertilizer type), E (irrigation type), F (pesticide type), G (herbicide type), H (fungicide type), I (insecticide type), and J (disease type). Each plot shows a different combination of these factors, with the resulting growth of the plants indicated by the number of plants that survived and the average height of the survivors. The plots are arranged in a 10x10 grid, with the first row showing the effect of factor A alone, the second row showing the effect of factor B alone, and so on, up to the tenth row showing the effect of factor J alone. The plots are labeled with the factor names and the combination of factors used.
